

Encryption Security Solutions has 100% sales growth

Metromode, 3/26/2009

Lake Orion-based Encryption Security Solutions isn't exactly recession proof, but it's close.

Leading digital security firms know that whether the economy is up or down, securing information is one of the last things new economy companies want to do in the Information Age.

"This isn't something companies can decide to do or not to do," says Kevin Lasser, CEO of Encryption Security Services. "It's something that has to be done. As the economy goes sour there is more data theft. The thieves are getting more creative."

That has allowed the company and its government wing, Pure Entropy Technologies, to hire another person. Its headcount is seven, including interns and an independent contractor. It hopes to add more people soon as it continues to grow.

The firm has enjoyed 100 percent revenue growth as the world increasingly goes digital. Lasser expects that trend to continue this year and next.

Source: Kevin Lasser, CEO of Encryption Security Solutions

Writer: Jon Zemke